

OMITTING MONDAYS IS BEST FOR PUBLIC

By J. W. MARCHBANK

With racing conducted as a sport every effort is made to have each meeting on the highest plane possible. Visitors as well as the home folk, may be expected to take the liveliest interest in the contests of the thoroughbreds out of the oval provided, and this is most important, the enjoyment of the spectators is uppermost in the minds of the men at the helm.

I found a year ago at Tanforan that putting on races on five of the six week days, skipping Mondays, was an ideal mode of procedure. The interval from Saturday to Tuesday gave men and women from other parts of the country—and we all know they flock here by the thousands all the year round—an opportunity to go on sight-seeing and shopping tours.

Another thing. The form of the horses is better with a two day let-up. The real test of any track is the consistency, or lack of it, on the part of the gallopers coming out each afternoon under colors in the events at various distances. Any trainer will tell you it is much easier to get a horse up to his best condition than it is to keep him fit over an extended period. "Staling off" of his charges is the bugaboo of every conditioner.

Racing five days a week is the Tanforan policy and it will be adhered to in the fall, beginning Saturday, October fifth. Having the sport six days a week turns it into a grind that is neither conducive to the permanence of racing nor to the upbuilding of its good name. I do not want anything at all resembling a grind at Tanforan this year or next or any other time.

Firenze was one of the grandest race mares that ever looked through a bridle, but she did not carry on in the breeding paddock. Her full sister, Fleurette, of no fame on the courses, was a success as a matron. The explanation: Fleurette was about the same conformation as her dam, Florida, while Firenze was of quite a different type. The tip is in selecting a brood mare to pick one that looks a good deal like her dam.

CONSIDERABLE EXCITEMENT AT BOARD MEETING

Supervisors Throw Verbal Brickbats At Session Of Monday Morning

Without any noticeable contusions or abrasions as a result thereof, Supervisors Witt and Beer staged a near "battle" and were almost at each other's throats, at the meeting of the County Board of Supervisors on Monday of this week. The fracas was quelled by Chairman Francis with much difficulty and hammering of his gavel.

The excitement was precipitated by the reading of a resolution recommending agreement by the board to financially assist in the construction of a million dollar livestock exhibition building by Agricultural District No. 1-A.

The resolution contained a recommendation that Supervisor Witt be named to represent the board's interest in the matter.

Later, when Chairman Francis suggested the entire board be named as a committee of the whole to act on the matter, it drew from Witt the retort:

"You had better put Supervisor Beer on that committee. He's opposed to the resolution. Perhaps he'll learn something of what it's about."

"I'm not against the proposition," replied the San Mateo supervisor. "I object to these resolutions coming before the board without an explanation."

"If you are intimating that I had anything to do about this before it came before the board, you're a liar," Witt charged.

"I intimated nothing of the sort," shouted Beer, rising to his feet and moving threateningly toward Witt's desk. "You can't call me a liar!"

"I still say that if you intimate I had anything to do about this resolution, you are lying," declared the supervisor.

Beer, coloring, remained on his feet. Chairman Francis rapped for order and Sheriff McGrath, "sitting in" as the acting executive, rose as if to move between the two board members.

The chairman chided Witt by saying at this point:

"I don't think that's quite the right expression for you to use in public meetings, Supervisor Witt."

The storm subsided when Francis

SPECTACLE OF 1935 "SCANDALS" DELIGHTS ALL

Ten Stars, Three Hundred
Dancing Beauties High Lights Of Great Hit

Slip us a ton of dynamic adjectives! Then maybe we can do justice to the scintillant gayety, "George White's 1935 Scandals," which opens at the Daly City Theater for a two-day run, Sunday and Monday, June 30 and July 1.

Here's the last triumphant word in screen entertainment, a splendid sunburst of comedy and music that sustains the reputation of George White as prince of showmen.

The second annual edition, sponsored by Fox Films, has everything. Here are ten top-rung stars: Alice Faye, James Dunn, Ned Sparks, Lyda Roberti, Cliff Edwards, Arline Judge, Eleanor Powell, Emma Dunn, Benny Rubin and George White, who conceived, produced, and directed the entire show.

The story, strong enough to stand alone, concerns a producer who stumbles on home-grown talent in a tank town, whisks them off to Broadway and Hollywood stardom, and when the bright lights get too strong for simple romance, whisks back home a pair of lovers.

Brilliantly kaleidoscopic in their 1000 eye-testing costumes designed by Charles LeMaire (he designs for Paris, besides for Broadway's shows) are the 200 glamorous dancing beauties.

What songs! They are by Jack Yellen, Cliff Friend and Joseph Meyer with additional lyrics by Herb Magidson; and are called, "According to the Moonlight," "It's An Old Southern Custom," "Hunkadola," "Oh, I Didn't Know (You'd Get That Way)," "I Was Born Too Late," and "I Got Shoes You Got Shoesies."

But that's not all. For look, here are six bright lilted songs, already being hummed throughout town.

"George White's 1935 Scandals" is super-entertainment.

The added feature is "Mr. Dynamite," with Edmund Lowe and Jean Dixon.

OUR CITY DADS ADJOURN MEET TO FRIDAY EVE

Letters Read In Regard To Speeding Up Of Work
On Pavement Job

The Daly City Council met in regular session Monday evening with but three members present, Mayor Smith and Councilman Selmi being absent.

A petition, signed by approximately 226 residents of the Crocker Tract was presented, asking that a permit be granted for the establishment of a school lunch room at 666 Bellevue avenue, opposite the Crocker school. There was a store of this kind in operation in 1917, but the territory has since been rezoned so as to exclude commercial establishments. There seemed to be a general demand from the residents of this district that a store be again permitted at this location. The matter was referred to Chairman Fahy of the ordinance committee for report.

Communications were read from the Division of Highways, the Union Paving Company and the Market Street Railways regarding the council's request that work be speeded up on the Mission street widening job. All the letters indicated that the city's request will be complied with, although there seemed to be an inclination to "pass the buck" from one to another.

A communication from Acting Executive McGrath requested attendance of representatives at a joint meeting of the County Festival Committee and a committee from the florists of the county in regard to holding of a flower festival. The meeting will be held at the San Mateo City Hall on Friday evening of this week. The matter was referred to Acting Mayor Sundermann.

Charles H. Peterson & Co. asked for the job of making the city audit, stating a certified public accountant residing in this county would be employed by them to do the work. This was referred to Councilman Selmi of the finance committee.

The following resolution was passed

ROOSEVELTIAN IDEAS IMPRESS CANADIANS

Legislation proposed in the House of Commons at Ottawa would create a currency fund along the lines established in this country under the lead of the present administration. In general terms the bill introduced by Prime Minister R. B. Bennett on behalf of the Finance Minister of the Dominion Government would mean "managed currency" for the northern nation.

It is estimated at least $60,000,000 will be the nucleus of a fund according to the provisions of the bill. An appropriation is made of the difference between the statutory price of gold, $20.67, and the current market price of the yellow metal, approximately $35 an ounce.

Under the direction of the Minister of Finance the fund and its increment will be kept in a special account and used when necessary to protect Canadian money abroad to check fluctuations by the purchase of foreign exchange or balances in London or New York banks.

Robert Cromie, publisher of the Vancouver Sun, after a swing around the circle from coast to coast in both the United States and Canada, has come to the conclusion that the real basis of prosperity is found in mining and other basic industries rather than in stock exchange speculation. In a conversation with Sidney Norman, mining editor of the British Columbia paper, Cromie said:

"As a matter of fact, the New York Stock Exchange, in its arrogant disdain of the laws of decency, had become almost wholly a distributive agency, instead of a meeting place for buyer and seller."

The publisher is convinced we are now entering upon a saner era, one that will prove far happier and more satisfying. He calls upon citizens to turn their attention to the almost limitless wealth of natural resources, such as mining and agriculture.

Herbert George Wells, who has been contributing a series of articles to "Collier's Weekly" on the "New America," has decided that we owe at least part of the troubles of the last few years to the fact that we are inept. Men produced by competitive individualism do not like to explain what they are doing and that habit has been carried over from business into government.

The famous publicist is of the opinion that business organizers failed President Roosevelt at a critical period and accordingly he had to go to what opponents have called "inexperienced professors" and "theorists" in an attempt to pull the nation out of the morass in which it found itself.

Wells, author of the "Work, Wealth, and Happiness of Mankind," the "Science of Life," and a number of well known novels, is an authority on social conditions and keeps in closest touch not only with tendencies in his own England but in other countries.

Jay Franklin, in an especially illuminating "story" in "Vanity Fair," reasons along the line that we need not worry over-much because the national budget is not balanced. He points out that the United States is a billion-dollar country and that the sooner we all get used to that fact, the easier our minds will be.

Franklin is right in saying that since the federal government has intervened in economic affairs, it must conduct its finances like those of a rapidly growing business, pointing out that every growing concern is always in the market for fresh funds to finance its expansion. With the break-down of private lending and much of private business finance, an expanding federal financial system became necessary. The government is now the nation's central banking agency, as Franklin states, spreading the risks over the entire nation, which private bankers were unwilling or unable to take.

TANFORAN VISITOR THRILLED BY COLT IN GAME VICTORY

Youngster Selected Soon
After Foaling Turns Out To Be "Down Under"
Champion

P. J. O'Shea, who was at "our own" Tanforan last year, returned to his home in Brisbane, down in the southern hemisphere, to find he had purchased a high class thoroughbred while he was making a world tour. The sportsman had picked out a colt, Buzzard King, when the little fellow was scampering by the side of his dam out in the field, and left instructions when he started on the trip for his commissioner to buy the suckling regardless of price. Now the colt is being heralded throughout Australasia as a real topnotcher, with conquests to his credit over the best two year olds in training.

Writers in the country below the equator were brought up in a different school from those in this neighborhood and devote all their space to the horses and races, not going in for propaganda about this or that official. In discussing the remarkable game win of Buzzard King in the Juvenile Handicap of the Queensland Turf Club, the racing representative of the Brisbane Truth said the colt scorned bumps that would have annoyed a wrestler and put in a paralyzing run over the final furlong.

Owner O'Shea is a close student of blood lines and when he heard a son of Rux imported the Buzzard, from Molly's Robe, was to be offered at a coming sale, he gave the youngster a careful going over at the farm and set his heart on having the colt run in his well known colors.

The Brisbane Courier-Mail is enthusiastic about the O'Shea colt, saying:

"Molly's Robe was one of the greatest mares of her time and her son, Buzzard King, promises to rise to the greatest heights. Buzzard King has everything to recommend him—"

SYNOPSIS

Following his father's bitter criticism of his idle life, and the withdrawal of financial assistance, Hal Ireland, only son of a wealthy banker, finds himself practically without funds but with the promise of a situation in San Francisco, which city he must reach, from New York, within a definite time limit. He takes passage with a cross-country auto party on a "share expense" basis. With five other members of the party, an attractive girl, Barry Trafford, middle-aged, Giles Kerrigan, Sister Anastasia, a nun, and an individual whom he instinctively dislikes, Martin Crack, he starts his journey. Barry's reticence, and her self-withdrawal, annoy him. To Kerrigan he takes at once.

Gradually Mrs. Pulsipher began to prattle about the household of her married daughter in Bridgeport, about places she and John had seen this trip and how they had liked them, about the reasons for sending certain postcards to certain friends back in L. A. Sister Anastasia maintained her sweet, receptive silence all the while; and Barry barely punctuated Mrs. Pulsipher's desultory sequences with a soft, almost husky "Yes" or "Did you?" or "No, I've never been there." Each time Hal looked at her in the mirror he felt she knew that he was looking; though she never glanced at him, her eyes seemed to go slowly on their conscious guard.

Kerrigan asked appropriate questions, as if he were edited by all that Mrs. Pulsipher had to say; and in a tone of anxiety and hope John from time to time stammered footnotes to his lady's saga of travel and domesticity.

Hal had forgotten about the dog until it gave a quick whimper, and Barry an exclamation that made him look around. The dog's forelegs were in Sister Anastasia's lap, his head turned in reproach toward where Barry brushed a shower of little embers from the coat upon which he had been lying. "Oh, the lining," Mrs. Pulsipher half wailed in sorrow. "Oh, is it ruined?" Then, with a grim pounce of her words at Hal: "His cigarette blew in the other window. Oh, what a shame, what a—"

"I am most awfully sorry," said Hal, sincerely contrite before the girl's disinterested look.

"The lining's ruined," said Mrs. Pulsipher with finality and triumph. "Ruined."

Barry's eyes—solemn, impersonal, confidently clear of resentment—looked down at the burn again. "It's not bad," she said to Mrs. Pulsipher. "It's easily patched. Really." She leaned to look beyond her knees. "Do you s'pose the rest of it's on the floor?"

Hal saw a coal glowing on the carpet and found enough cigarette behind it to pick up. The end was wet, brown, and flattened; he threw it quickly out. Barry's blue look—the blue of asters, flecked with small, clear crystals of live yellow—accused him of something then. "That wasn't your cigarette," she said.

Hal smiled a little. "It hardly matters," he said. "I'm so awfully sorry about it."

"Please don't think of it," said Barry. "It's really nothing."

"You're being a sportsman," "No," she said quietly, and her full lips came together again in composed defense, her eyes saying briefly, No, you don't; not that way.

Something made him stop his look on Crack as he turned back. Crack sat there as if the straight, sparsely padded seat were the top of comfort, as if the close, damp heat under the sun-baked roof were the first beguilement of a spring sun. A slight, confident smile held his lazy lips—lips that had a smooth curve of adolescence without being precisely youthful either. Hal watched him longer than he meant to, interested by something he couldn't see with his eyes. Crack's amiable smile broadened a little before he turned his head slowly, and Hal didn't look away until Crack's full face was toward him. What's the little guy thinking now? Hal wondered.

In the flimsily converted room where dark screens sealed in heat, flies, and the smell of frying hamburger and onions, two heavy and hot sisters clumped about on quick feet—cooking, waiting, finding things miraculously without collision. Miller put a toothpick into his grinning mouth and leaned sleepily on the counter. "Say," he said, as if he were a policeman, "is it a good garage in this burg?"

"Is there something wrong with the car?" said Mrs. Pulsipher at once. Miller cocked the toothpick at her. "Yup," he said. "Couple stickin' valves. Might as well get 'em fixed up while you folks eat."

"Gad, sir, why didn't you get 'em fixed yesterday?" Kerrigan asked. "Sleepin' yestiddy," said Miller and sucked sharply. "Come in from Chicago in thirty hours."

"Look here, speedball," said Kerrigan gravely, "we've been delayed enough already. If you crowded the heap this far, you can get through till supper time. We can sleep where we eat tonight and you'll have a lot more time than here."

Mrs. Pulsipher, nodding decisive approval, said: "Yes."

Miller looked sheepish. "Awright—sure," he said; "but I gotta get gas noil." "There's a pump outside," said one fat sister. Miller looked round at the window with slow suspicion. "Awright," he said.

The others moved upon the tables at the back of the room with apparent intent to have a meal. Hal stayed at the counter, moodily regarding the fly-specked thermometer that stood at eighty-nine. He heard Mrs. Pulsipher saying confidentially, "... and lots of onions over it, crisp. I'll tell you about my dessert later." "Bring some ham neggs," Miller said, as if life were too short and weary a thing to permit exercise of imagination. Hal ordered oatmeal cookies at three for a nickel from under a glass bell, and a bottle of oversharp but icy ginger ale.

Then Crack came to the counter from nowhere in particular, and in his unsurely pitched voice told the girl, "I'll have the same as him."

Hal looked at him and found him smiling recently, his eyes bemused and faintly speculative.

He wondered how much Barry had ordered.

"She's the only one isn't eating enough for a hired hand," said Crack. "Her and that frog sister."

Hal looked at him quickly, but there was nothing definable in the indolent amiability of Crack's light-blue eyes.

"Who d'you mean by 'her'?" said Hal inhospitably—adding to himself, If this guy goes on reading my mind, I'll give it to him as a present; I won't live with it.

"The babe they thought was with me—Trafford," said Crack.

Hal finished his ginger ale in a sting-y, refreshing gulp and put a dime on the counter. Then he turned for a look of frank curiosity at the faintly rosy, unaged face beside him. Even if the fella's standards were totally different from his own, what did it matter if Hal was rude to him? The lazy, mischievous curiosity of his eyes seemed to be partly ready for rebuffs. Hal nodded briefly and went out into the hazy, dust-smelling sunlight that was just as hot and caged-in as the screened room.

He went around the corner into what was technically shade and leaned against the wall to light a cigarette. The terrier, unleashed, trotted around the corner eager for smells, and then the Trafford girl came, watching him with a thoughtful smile, the conscious defense of her large eyes gratefully relaxed. The h-l with being a stick, Hal said to himself; one honest try, and if she turns it back at me, I can jolly-well be rude with comfort.

He watched her take a couple of her sure, deliberate steps. Her smile took away the traces of toughness Hal thought he'd noticed before—accented a smooth delicacy in the slight in-drawing of her cheeks under the high cheek bones. The faint pink there wasn't make-up either; and her frank lips were no lipstick. They were frank lips, generous, full without being sensual, under their two simple peaks. There was an air about her of reticent vitality, sure and artless as the angle which gave her plain blue hat its chic.

Hal pushed his back from the wall and spoke a quiet "Hello."

Her look at him was startled, almost alarmed, but he met her eyes aggressively, smiling. It was an instant before her smile began, the parting of her lips delayed; her look was relieved, but without demonstration. "Hello," she said, as if to a pleasant little boy, and looked off to see where the dog was.

"How're you?" he said.

"Fine," she said, her smooth voice just off huskiness. She appraised his smiling eyes thoughtfully another moment before she added, "Your clothes are English."

"They're my brother's," he said at once, wondering why the devil he'd said that when it was his own old suit and he had no brother anyway.

"You like England," she said, not as if he would deny it but as if he wouldn't volunteer it. "You probably went to college there once."

"Yes," said Hal. "Why not?"

"You like it better than this country."

"I'm not sure I'd say that."

"You're not sure you wouldn't, either, are you? Are you flattered when people take you for an Englishman?"

"Used to be, when I was younger. Why?"

"How old are you now?"

"Twenty-six," Hal's eyes were laughing as he said to himself, Holy mackerel, what is this? Look to your balance here, Ireland. "How old are you?"

"About twenty-three," she said, as if it were quite unimportant.

"You mean about twenty-three by count, but far older in—in experience." He kept the brightness in his eyes, his smile widening.

That seemed to please her; she gave a single laugh and looked down at his mouth, then back at his eyes and off to see where the dog was. But she said nothing.

"What's the pup's name?" he said.

"Doctor Caligari," she said, and the dog looked around from an abandoned oil drum in bright inquiry.

"Which part do you call him?"

"Doc," she said. "I don't suppose you ever saw that German movie a long time ago—'The Cabinet of Doctor Caligari'?"

"Three times," he said. "One of the five best pictures I ever saw."

They both watched the dog for a moment of silence; it wasn't until afterward that Hal realized they must both have been thinking hard, that they shouldn't have been watching him.

Then portly Kerrigan ambled around the corner, the smoke wisp from the cigarette in his wide mouth drifting up past one squinted eye. He sucked a damp breath between his lips and his closed teeth as he looked at Hal.

"You a federal man?"

Hal chuckled in his surprise and searched Kerrigan's face for a hint of humor. "No," he said; "are you?" "No," said Kerrigan. "I've tried a few things in a short life, but never had time for that."

Hal bent over and snapped his fingers at Doc. The dog came at once, hopped his forefeet up on Hal's knee, and tried to repay Hal's deft massaging with licks at his nose.

"Sounded off at that fella Crack in New York, didn't he?" Kerrigan was saying.

Hal looked up and found Barry's eyes on him, solemn again and faintly hostile. "Yes," she said. Then, "Here, Doc," she snapped the lead to his collar, gave Kerrigan a friendly smile and said, "I think I'll sit in the car."

They watched her walk away, her arms swinging to the unstudied, inquiring grace of her long-legged steps. Kerrigan's brown eyes were pleased to themselves, almost genial, as he looked at Hal. "Hollywood, I guess," he said, in odd gentleness.

"Shouldn't wonder," said Hal.

"Got everything," Kerrigan said, with a sort of wistful benevolence. "Ought to make the number-one spot if she screens like her looks."

"And if Miller doesn't kill us all," said Hal.

Kerrigan sucked a wet breath through narrowly parted lips. "He seems to lead easily in his sleep. I guess he's all right. Anything happens comes under the head of experience anyway, and that's profit."

"I suppose so."

The twinkle was more personal as Kerrigan watched him with amusement and care. "Only suppose?" he said.

Hal smiled. "Well, I haven't had such a h-l of a lot—really."

"If fifty years can say anything to you," said Kerrigan kindly, unurgently. "I recommend the collecting of experience. Cigar bands, postage stamps, porcelains, even dollars aren't in it." He stopped before Hal expected him to.

"You have a collection?"

"Decent," said Kerrigan without arrogance. "Decent enough. Some have escaped me because I've looked too hard for 'em; there're a couple of holes I'd like to fill."

"Such as," said Hal.

"It's probably different with different collectors," Kerrigan said with a polite semblance of caution. "Most people would think the hole in mine was a little on the seamy side, perhaps." He looked at Hal in detached honesty.

"I've never been alone with a man—a man who deserved to be killed—and killed him."

Hal searched for some trace of madness in the brown, wide look, but he could see none. He laughed shortly.

"I'll remember that," he said, "and let you know if anything turns up."

Kerrigan's eyes smiled in appreciative warmth, and Hal let his own answer them with an involuntary addition to civility.

The after-lunch leg of the journey lay through more hopeful country. There were strata of good smells—smell of new hay, of flowers, of the fertile, country richness about cow-barns.

Barry's eyes, in the mirror, were deep with their blue thoughtfulness, far away from the car now, oblivious of its passengers and of Hal's studies of her smooth-featured solemnity. Once or twice she looked in Crack's direction, as if wondering what he might be like; but not Hal's straight, limber back before her nor his quick, gray eyes in the mirror, caught her curiosity at all.

Then in the silence, watching the endless concrete run in from the contours and white-posted curves ahead, Hal came slowly by an illusion of some presence riding with them in the car—something that had been there all along but was perceptible only now that the first stiff fringes of strangeness had been talked away, were being dozed away. It seemed faintly—very faintly, when Hal tried to fix it and examine it—portentous, like thunder muttering in the next valley after a sultry day.

The man's driving is getting me, Hal thought: at my time of life, too. Or is it because the low hour of the day's coming, without signs of a bath or clean clothes or whisky and soda?

Hal was honestly trying to marshal some innocent and friendly remark to draw Barry from her isolation, and scare off his own faint uneasiness—when somewhere down on the floor the impetuous rattle of a smothered alarm clock hurried up into the silence. Doc sprang up, barking, and Mrs. Pulsipher dove forward with a scared grunt, as if for the start of a shoe-tying contest. Burrowing with grim diligence into her black, near-leather hold-all, she brought up the alarm clock and stopped it just before it could trail wearily off of itself.

"Why did you wind it again, John?" she said all in a breath, her face red, her eyes angry as if she had been lucky to escape with a mere fright.

John was terribly embarrassed. "I—I—I—I don't know," he said. "I—I—I don't know."

In the mirror, Hal watched Barry's look at John's bewilderment—an indulgent look, with a hint of amused tenderness, as if John were another dog who might be friends with Doctor Caligari. Then her reflected look met his. The tenderness went from it, her eyes barely remembered him, shared nothing with him, remained on him for only a second of half-hostile disinterest before they returned to the moving road-side.

In 1928 Japan made its first shipment of frozen tuna to the United States. Since then the industry has grown until as much as 6,000 tons a year are exported to the United States.

Light on Age-Old Mystery

Mummy of Baby, Perfectly Preserved, Unearthed in New Mexico, May Lead to Solution of Great Riddle of the Pueblo People.

The pick of a lonely gold prospector a short time ago unearthed a treasure on the Jemez Plateau, in New Mexico, which brings one step nearer the solution of the great riddle of the deserted pueblos there and in the Chaco canyon, says the Kansas City Star. Great mystery has always surrounded these prehistoric ruins in the district northwest of Santa Fe.

Where did those ancient peoples go? What drove them from their pueblos, so well built and so strong? One day they were there, 11,000 of them, living in 14 large towns in symmetrical pueblos four and five stories high. Then they were gone, leaving no word, no sign to say where.

The prospector found one mute little messenger to throw a bit of light on the mysteries which surround the customs of these Tewa peoples. Instead of gold, he uncovered a carefully wrapped bundle from the loose soil. With trembling fingers he began to loosen the outer covering.

The prospector found a softly woven blanket lined with feathers in a perfect state of preservation. Within that was another blanket, the downlike feathers duplicates of those in a modern baby's pillow. When that was opened there lay before the prospector the perfectly preserved mummy of a two-year-old child.

There he lay, with an ear of corn in his hand, a little pottery bowl over his face, just as he had when he was buried about 1,600 years ago. His hair was tousled as any child's would be in sleep, and his tiny hand grasped the ear of corn as if, tired, he had fallen asleep.

The prospector hastened to the authorities with his treasure. It was they who fixed his burial date as about 350. The priceless find was minutely examined, all its history searched out by the signs which only expert archeologists understand. Then it was put on display at the Museum of New Mexico, in Santa Fe.

Only four such mummies have ever been found, and this seems to be the most interesting specimen of all. So proud are the archeologists connected with the museum that they are carefully preparing a report to be printed in learned scientific journals. Meanwhile they zealously guard the child against photographers until they have made their weighty reports and safely lodged him in the archeologists' Hall of Fame.

Already the word has gone around among the native Indians, and many of them, resplendent in their silver and turquoise rings, armbands and necklaces, have come to view the little mummy. They have walked by with impassive faces.

"A pity," they say in their strange, expressionless voices, "a pity to take the little child from his grave where he has rested so long." Some seem to be afraid bad luck will follow those who leave him there in a glass cabinet sleeping his timeless sleep before the eyes of strangers.

Many scientific explanations have been advanced as to the cause of the departure of the Tewa peoples from their homes. Some say a pestilence wiped them out. Others that an enemy annihilated them. But the theory which seems verified, after the intense drouth of the last summer, is that the ground level of their water supply sank during some terrible great drouth and drove them in desperation to seek other homes.

However, no man can say definitely, for here the scientists run against a blank wall at every turn. The Tewa peoples, though living in a high state of civilization, had no written word. There are no old tablets to decipher, no Rosetta stones on the New Mexico mesas. On every hand in these ancient pueblos there are riddles, but the greatest of all is the location of their burial ground. Up to the present none has been found for this large prehistoric community of Chetro Keti in Chaco canyon.

Feast of Raw Peanuts Upset the President

Calvin Coolidge was browsing about the basement rooms and corridors of the White House, a short time after taking office, when he spied a large sack of peanuts near a door leading to the rear grounds.

This discovery interested him at once. He always had a passion for any kind of nuts, especially peanuts. This huge bag was open at the top and looked most inviting. He gazed upon his find for a second or two and then helped himself liberally. He filled his two coat pockets.

Later in the morning, while at his desk in the executive office, he rang for his secretary and told him he felt sick and directed that his engagements be canceled. He went to his bedroom, suffering with pains in the stomach. His physician made him drink plentifully of castor oil, and in a few hours he was feeling more like himself.

Upon inquiry the President discovered the peanuts he had been eating were raw. He did not know that the nuts to which he helped himself were for the squirrels. For years a sack of raw peanuts had been kept on hand for the policemen and gardeners to fill their pockets before going to their duties in the grounds. It was in this way that the squirrels were fed.—Boston Globe.

TIRES MAY LOOK ALIKE ON THE OUTSIDE ON THE INSIDE THEY ARE DIFFERENT

HEAT on the inside created by friction is the main cause of blowouts. Firestone tires are different on the inside—they are built with the patented extra process of Gum-Dipping that soaks every cord and insulates every strand with pure liquid rubber, preventing internal friction and heat. No other make of tire is Gum-Dipped.

Firestone performance records again emphasize the undisputed evidence that Firestone tires are not only blowout-proof, but give greatest protection against skidding. There are three questions and answers that will solve the problem of what tires to buy:

QUESTION 1—"Will the tread give me the greatest traction and protection against skidding?"

ANSWER—Recent tests by a leading University show that Firestone High Speed Non-Skid Tires stop a car 15% quicker than any other of the leading makes. For eight consecutive years Firestone tires have been on the winning car in the dangerous Pike's Peak Race where a skid means death. This is undisputed evidence that Firestone gives car owners greatest protection against skidding.

QUESTION 2—"Are they blowout-proof?"

ANSWER—Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires have the most amazing records for being blowout-proof of any tires ever built. In the gruelling 500-Mile Race at Indianapolis, May 30th, every one of the 33 cars was equipped with Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires. Not one of the 33 drivers had any tire trouble of any kind.

Ab Jenkins drove his 5,000 pound car on Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires over the hot salt beds of Utah, 3,000 miles at 127.2 miles per hour, with temperatures as high as 120°, without tire trouble of any kind. These are most amazing proofs of blowout protection ever known.

QUESTION 3—"Without sacrificing these two important safety features will they give me longer mileage, thus making them the most economical tires I can buy?"

ANSWER—Firestone High Speed Tires not only give you more than 50% longer wear, but also lowest cost per mile due to the tough, wear-resisting tread built with higher shoulders and a wider, flatter contour. This rugged tread is held securely to the Gum-Dipped cord body by Firestone's patented construction of two extra layers of cords under the tread, a special construction feature not used in any other tire. Unequaled mileage records by thousands of car owners add undisputed evidence of longer wear and greater economy of Firestone High Speed tires.

You Always Get Better Quality at No Higher Price when You Buy a Firestone Tire with the Firestone Name and Guarantee

1 University tests show Firestone tires stop cars 15 to 25% quicker.

2 Gum-Dipped cords give greater blowout protection. Gum-Dipping is not used in other tires.

3 Wider, flatter tread gives more than 50% longer non-skid wear.

FORTY MILLIONS BRITISH COLUMBIA MINERAL OUTPUT

Gold Production Has Made Greatest Increase Of Any Other Form Of Mining

From a northern exchange has been gleaned the following interesting article:

Highlights of British Columbia's great year in mineral production in 1934 were:

Gold production established an all-time high, in both volume and value.

Lead output reached record figures in volume of production, while zinc fell just short of the record attained in 1930.

The number of shipping metalliferous mines increased from 109 in 1933 to 145 in 1934.

Those shipping over 100 tons increased from 47 to 69.

During the year 12,985 men were employed in all branches of the industry. This is an increase of 1616 over the number employed in 1933.

Dividends declared by mining companies in 1934 aggregated 6,167,278. This compared with dividends for 1933 of $3,034,484, or more than doubled.

The value of mineral production for the year 1934 is definitely placed at $42,305,297, an increase of $9,702,625 over that of 1933, according to the annual report of Hon. George S. Pearson, Minister of Mines.

Gold production accounted for by far the greatest increase in value for any one metal or material in 1934, followed in order by lead, silver, zinc, copper, coal and miscellaneous metals, the report shows.

During 1934 there were 2893 persons employed in and around the coal mines.

Six fatal accidents occurred as compared with three for 1933. The ratio of fatal accidents per 1000 persons employed was 2.07 as against 0.97 in 1933.

There were 22 fatal accidents in and about metalliferous mines last year, an increase of twelve from the figures for 1933.

There were 4525 persons employed under and above ground in the metalliferous lode mines last year.

The ratio of fatal accidents was 4.86 as against 3.20 in the preceding year. The ratio for the last ten year period was 2.95.

The tonnage mined per fatal accident was 446,390 tons for the last ten year period.

The report states an appreciable increase in gold and silver production is anticipated for 1935; lead and zinc productions are not expected to show any notable change, while closing of the Granby plant at Anyox will have an adverse effect on production of copper, although latest advices are to the effect that the Anyox operation is likely to continue until the latter quarter of the year at least.

It is reasonable to expect, the report states, that the value of mineral production for 1935 will total approximately $47,000,000.

During the year 1934 imports of crude oil for refining in British Columbia totalled 158,288,000 gallons, from which 40,000,000 gallons of gasoline and 93,000,000 gallons of fuel oil were produced and sold in the province.

In addition to this 23,293,000 gallons of fuel oil were imported in bond for marine use and 17,787,000 gallons of fuel oil were imported for use in the province.

ENGAGEMENT IS ANNOUNCED

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Silicani of Colma have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Elsie Silicani to Frank Ranck of San Bruno avenue in San Francisco.

The young couple are planning to be married some time in July of this year.

Since Thursday the popular bride to be has been wearing a beautiful diamond ring.

LESSON SERMON OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

"Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ." These words from Revelation comprise the Golden Text to be used Sunday, June 30, in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, branches of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass.

The subject of the Lesson-Sermon will be "Christian Science." Included among the Scriptural selections will be: "There came also a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jerusalem, bringing sick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were healed every one" (Acts 5: 16).

The following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, will also be included: "Will you tell the sick that their condition is hopeless, unless it can be aided by a drug or climate? Are material means the only refuge from fatal chances? Is there no divine permission to conquer discord of every kind with harmony, with Truth and Love? . . . We need to understand the affirmation of divine Science, dismiss superstition, and demonstrate truth according to Christ" (pp. 394, 149).

WEEKLY BULLETIN

By Chief A. P. Chesney

In a recent report of the National Board of Fire Underwriters a study of 50,000 dwelling house fires shows that fifty per cent of them are caused by smoking or matches and rubbish. Approximately fifty per cent of the loss of life occurs in home fires.

Cleaning up rubbish and accumulations of combustibles is the largest single factor in fire protection. Experience has shown that a general campaign, followed by regular inspections, to keep down all accumulations of material which favor the start of a fire in a community may greatly reduce its fire losses. All of the inspections of the local fire departments does not amount to much unless they get the co-operation of every individual in the community, and the removal of rubbish and maintenance of general cleanliness should be the object of every citizen, always keeping in mind that "A Clean House Seldom Burns."

ALCAZAR OPENED SUNDAY WITH "POP GOES THE WEASEL"

The local legitimate theater receives further impetus with the Alcazar lighting up Sunday night with the opening of "Pop Goes the Weasel," Willis Maxwell Hoodhus' mystery comedy, which came here after fourteen weeks run at the Mayan Theater in Los Angeles.

The action takes place in a "dark" New York theater, the day before the opening, with much of the plot being unfolded in the aisles of the theater, as well as on the stage. This novelty of presentation is largely responsible for the success of the production.

A large cast is used in the presentation, the players including: Ross Howard, Gordon Paige, Betty Solon, Mary Bergon, Leon Lord, Opal Cotton, Gil Rankin, George Spelvin, James Wade, Lucile Edmond, Marjorie Lawson, Louise Todd and Faye Stone.

The local merchant can increase his business and keep purchases at home by advertising in The Record.

SOME QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Some Little Known Matters That Should Prove of General Interest

(By Maude Larue Ives)

Question: What are the principal rivers of California and where do they rise and flow?

Answer: The Sacramento and San Joaquin. Both rise in the Sierra Nevada, but hundreds of miles apart. Finding the valley floor, the Sacramento flows south and the San Joaquin north until they join about sixty miles northeast of San Francisco and make their way to the Golden Gate. All along their course they are joined by tributaries from the east, which flow down from the great Sierras brimming with water from the melting snow.

Question: How can a hill travel?

Answer: On the South American desert the coast winds which blow always toward the north, roll the little grains on the south side of the pile over one another, so they travel up the outside of the queerly half moon shape sand hills, and roll down on the inside, keeping the hill the same shape but slowly moving it onward.

Question: To what family does the egg plant belong?

Answer: To the potato family.

Question: What little animal flies?

Answer: The flying squirrel, which has a fold of skin along each side of its body, connected with its legs, which enables it to make long flying leaps from tree to tree. The ordinary flight is from 50 to 60 feet.

Question: What is a fluid?

Answer: All liquids are fluids, but all fluids are not always considered as liquids. Air and all gases are fluids. Water at ordinary temperature

WOMEN'S CIVIC CLUB ELECT NEW OFFICERS

The Daly City Womens Civic Club met Thursday evening of last week at their clubrooms on Winchester street, at which time the newly elected officers were installed by Mrs. Lillian Landini.

Mrs. Ann Eason who is to serve another term as president, was presented with a lovely gift by the members.

The following incoming officers were also presented with a corsage: President, Ann Eason; vice president, Maynard Chesney; corresponding secretary, Hilda Dennis; recording secretary, Mazie Boyle; treasurer, Bertha Malawany; auditor, Emelia Lewis; historian, Helen Sheedy, and parliamentarian, M. Linden.

After a delightful program and social evening refreshments were served to the members.

With the Always Popular Ruffles

PATTERN 2220

Perhaps the reason girls love ruffles is because men "adore" them. You'll be very definitely "dated" (in more ways than one) when you appear in Fashion's newest scoop—Double Tiered Ruffles—some Sunday afternoon! What more heavenly than 2220 made up in soft powder blue printed chiffon? That ruffle that starts and ends very conservatively at the waistline, looks its flutty best at the shoulder with the help of the sleeve ruffle! A cool way to eliminate sleeve difficulty, too. The skirt takes just enough flare to give it graceful movement. Less expensive but just as lovely in organ-dy or sheer print cotton!

Pattern 2220 is available in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 22, 24, 26, 28, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38 and 40. Size 16 takes 3½ yards 39 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address, and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern department, 243 West Seventeenth Street, New York City.

"Are you complaining of the cost of living?"

"I am," answered Farmer Corn-tassel. "When I go to town it costs me all out of reason to have my pants pressed."

Naughty Ghost

Willie—Mother, you know the ghost that you told me about that is in that dark closet where you keep the cake?

Mother—Yes.

Willie—Well, the ghost took all the cookies that were in there.—Border Cities Star.

Stand Not Understood

"What do your constituents think of the stand you are making?"

"I don't know," observed Senator Sorghum. "Every time I think I have made a stand some of 'em get together and threaten me with notice that it's my move."

THOUGHT HE'D "STRUCK HELL"

How First U. S. Oil Gusher Was Brought In.

"I have struck hell itself; may God have mercy on me."

This was the terror-keyed scream which greeted the first of American gushers, unwittingly "brought in" by the first American oil producer on the bank of the Cumberland river, at Burksville, Ky., in 1829. His name is lost to history and he was boring for salt water—not oil—with the avowed determination "to strike salt water or strike hell."

There came a roar; a geyser of oil and gas exploded from the pipe, tossing his drilling tools high, and caught fire from his forge. The flaming fluid poured into the river and the pioneer of American oil pioneers did not know he had brought in America's first gusher; he thought he had drilled into Satan's personal homestead.

The anecdote made a hit with the large assemblage of scientists attending a session of the American Chemical society, celebrating the tercentenary of chemistry in America. It was one of several illustrative anecdotes told by Dr. Gustav Egloff, in the course of his address on "Three Hundred Years of Oil—A Story of Conservation."

In reviewing the history of the petroleum industry from the time, 300 years ago, when a missionary to the Indians discovered oil near the town of Cuba, in western New York, to the present, Doctor Egloff gave credit to the scientists of research laboratories for most of the almost phenomenal developments in the American oil industry.

"From its beginning in 1627," he said, "the oil industry has grown until it produced 900,000,000 barrels of crude oil in 1934, of which it refined 893,000 barrels. The industry today has an investment of more than $13,000,000,000 in wells, pipe lines, storage tanks, refineries and filling stations."

"In its early days oil-refining methods were crude, involving merely a physical separation of the crude oil into different fractions, more or less satisfactory for the purposes for which they were intended. But a comprehensive technique has been gradually built up through consistent research."

"It is significant that within the last ten years the number of chemists employed in the oil industry has increased from 8,891 to 25,274, an increase of 184 per cent. Proportionately increasing numbers of engineers, geologists, paleontologists and scientifically trained explorers for oil have been drafted into all branches of the oil business. It is estimated that the sum being expended in research in the manifold divisions of the oil industry exceeds $200,000,000 a year."

"When we see the results that have already been accomplished through scientific research and application of its discoveries to the operation of the petroleum industry, who will try to set limits to the tremendous savings that will result in the future from continuing research programs into which the oil industry today is plowing back more than $200,000,000 a year from its earnings?"—Chicago Daily News.

PASSING TRUCKS IS SAFETY SNAG

Many efforts have been made to find a solution for the problem of passing trucks on the highway. So far it is said, every proposed solution has too many obvious weaknesses to justify much hope in it.

At the moment, truck manufacturers are of the opinion that the most promising way out is the development of a signal which will enable the truck operator to inform the overtaking passenger vehicle when conditions are such as to justify passing. Many signals have been developed to this end, but none of them has proved sufficiently effective to win the industry's complete support.

Even if such a signal were developed, it has its obvious limitations. The greatest of these is that it puts the truck driver in the position of attempting to direct traffic; makes him responsible for the judgment of other vehicle operators. The practice has its definite hazards, as demonstrated by an attempt to apply it as a courtesy through the medium of hand signals. Many truck drivers and trucking company executives view the responsibility involved as one from which they would like to be freed.

Despite the vast amount of ingenuity that has gone into efforts to solve the problem, the picture of a heavily laden commercial vehicle leading a long parade of passenger cars is altogether too common for the satisfaction of everyone concerned.

EXPLAINS NEW STATE AUTO FEE FOR MOTORISTS

Procedure Is Necessary For Obtaining Renewal Of License Certificate

Payment of personal property taxes on automobiles will be required this year as usual and certificates of registration must bear the stamp of the assessor in order to obtain new license plates at the 1936 renewal period. Commencing next year, however, car owners will not pay a personal property tax on automobiles, that tax being then eliminated by the newly enacted law which places an additional state registration fee on motor vehicles, but at the same time removes such property from city and county tax rolls. And the law requiring stamping of registration certificates to show clearance of personal property tax payment will be in effect at the 1936 renewal period for the last time.

These and other important features of the new law are explained in a statement by the California State Automobile Association analyzing the legislation for the guidance and information of car owners.

The new additional fee, fixed at $1.75 per $100, becomes due and payable on January 1, 1936, with the opening period for renewal of registration. After February 4, end of the period, the regular $3 registration fee doubles as a delinquent penalty, but the new additional fee does not. The new fee, however, will constitute a lien on the car to which it applies. While the $3 fee will remain the same regardless of when the car is registered during the year, it is provided that the additional fee shall be reduced one-twelfth for each month which shall have elapsed since the beginning of any year on cars registered for the first time in the state after the end of January.

There will be no exemptions. Those who have heretofore applied their exemption rights to their automobiles will no longer be able to do so, because the additional registration fee is not a property tax. The new law removes motor vehicles from that classification by taking them away from local tax rolls.

The measure enacted by the legislature provides that the personal property tax on automobiles now collected by cities and counties shall be abolished and that in lieu of it a state tax, or fee, shall be paid as an additional registration fee at the same time and in the same manner as the $3 registration fee, which continues in effect. The additional fee is fixed at 1.75 per cent of the actual value of the automobile, according to "Blue Book" ratings to be compiled by the Department of Motor Vehicles. These ratings are expected to closely parallel the values which have been used by city and county officials in ascertaining local assessed valuation.

Compared with the present personal property taxes the additional registration fee will result in only slight variations both up and down from the amounts now paid.

The average tax rate on all taxable property throughout California is $1.779 per $100 of actual value, according to the State Board of Equalization. In considering the state as a whole the rate of $1.75 provided for in the "in lieu" tax law would therefore be a slight variation from the amount of present personal property taxes. The following situations will develop: in counties where the tax rate is higher than the statewide average there will be under the new law a reduction, while in counties where the tax rate is below the average there will be a slight increase.

It is provided by the new law that 25 per cent of the amount collected by the state under the 1.75 rate shall be returned to the cities on the basis of relative population, and that 12 1/2 per cent shall be returned to the counties on the same basis. The remainder of 62 1/2 per cent goes into the state general fund, but it is provided that this money shall be "ear-marked" for the purpose of paying interest and principal on old state highway bonds.

Second Coming Of Christ Is Presbyterian Sermon

The present uncertainty in the world today makes a sermon on the Second Coming of Christ a subject of great importance. In the morning sermon at 11 o'clock Rev. John R. Stevenson will speak on this topic.

In the evening there will also be a subject of equal importance in "Jonah," the future of the Jewish people. What is happening to the Jews in Germany? What is going to happen to them in America? What is the destiny of this ancient people of God? Come out to Grace Presbyterian Church, corner of Hanover and Evergreen avenue. The evening service is at 7:45 o'clock.

The Church of the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem, in which millions of persons have worshipped since the 2nd century, A. D., is made up of a group of 30 cathedrals, chapels and shrines.

OLD GLORY WINS SOME TROPHIES AT ENCAMPMENT

Chronicle of Other Activities During Past Month and Soon to Come

(E. Dorn, Publicity Chairman)

The Thirteenth Annual Department Encampment was held June 16 to 19 in Bakersfield and was attended by some 4000 delegates and visitors from the states of California and Nevada. Department President Margaret Hubbard, presided over one of the snappiest and most successful encampments ever held.

The delegates from Old Glory Auxiliary were M. Koerner, E. Lewis, C. Linzer, N. Pinnell, R. De Courcy and B. Allen.

The Ladies Drill Team, with their happy smiles and snappy new uniforms, attended the convention with a determination to bring back a trophy. We are happy to announce that Old Glory's team won the second award in the competitive drill.

Our drill master, Fred Collins, is to be commended for his untiring efforts and patience during this past year. To Comrade Collins' efforts we owe much of our success.

One of the most colorful events of the convention was the mile long parade of uniformed bodies of patriotic organizations, which ended at the high school play grounds, where the massed colors and teams were photographed, and again when the various drill teams and drum corps were competing for honors.

One prize was not enough for Old Glory this year. We also won the first award of a silver cup for the finest historian's book. This book was compiled and decorated by Historian Blanche Allen and is truly a work of art.

Old Glory Drill Team has just received an invitation to participate in the Fourth of July parade to be held in San Francisco. We hope we will have a good turn out of officers and members.

Thomas E. Hickey Post No. 2660 now has an Auxiliary, which was instituted this month by Past Department President Margaret Hubbard.

assisted by the San Mateo-Santa Clara Bi-County Council. We should all try to visit this baby Auxiliary and lend them a helping hand.
